

I 修学旅行の行き先の変化に関する次の英文を読み、下記の設問に答えよ。(配点 25 点)

With the increasing number of foreign tourists coming to Japan and the *depreciation of the yen, the form of school trips for junior high and high school students is beginning to change. More and more schools are moving away from Kyoto and other 1) staple school trip destinations as well as popular overseas locations. The *diversification of school trips is likely to continue, with a survey showing that half of schools are considering 2) alternative destinations.

“It’s 3) (① possible ② visit ③ longer ④ popular ⑤ no ⑥ to) temples and shrines as we used to,” said the principal of a junior high school in Tokyo.

Kyoto was the destination for its school trip in September. There were long lines at bus stops and both Kiyomizudera Temple and Fushimi Inari Taisha Shrine were packed with foreign tourists, he said.

According to a survey conducted by the Educational Tour Institute in the 2023 academic year, 90% of public junior high schools in the Kanto region conducted school trips to the Kinki region. However, 54% said they would like to consider other destinations for such trips in the future, citing the Hokuriku and Tohoku regions as alternative destinations. As students are unable to visit the same number of tourist attractions due to the crowds, they cannot expect the same learning benefits as before. Therefore, it is said that many schools are considering alternative destinations.

Kamiyugi Junior High School changed the destination for next year’s school trip to the atomic-bombed city of Nagasaki. “Amid the tense international situation, we want to on peace education,” the principal said. A second-year student at the school said, “I want to study the history and culture of Nagasaki.”

The number of schools choosing overseas destinations for school trips has not returned to pre-pandemic levels due to factors such as the weak yen and rising fuel costs.

According to JTB Corp., 45% of schools that used to send students on school trips abroad before the pandemic have switched to trips.

The town of Yamatsuri in Fukushima Prefecture had sent junior high school students to Australia for about 25 years, but stopped the program because of the rising cost of travel.

The focus of school trips has also changed from conventional sightseeing to one of increasing exploration and experience, with “exploratory learning” being in the current official guidelines for school teaching.

Students from Yashio High School toured Hokuriku and other regions over four days and three nights during their school trip in October.

The students conducted exploratory learning on Fukui Prefecture, where the residents are ranked first in Japan for happiness, but the number of tourists is low. They also had the experience of staying in minpaku lodgings at private homes.

Decentralized activities and experiential programs are also being encouraged by local governments that host large numbers of student trips.

For schools, Okinawa Prefecture provides a *subsidy of up to ¥10,000 per student if schools decrease the use of buses from October to December, when there is an increase in tourist groups, and if activities are conducted outside of tourist areas during school trips.

Since the last academic year, the city of Kyoto has provided students on school trips free opportunities to watch dances by maiko apprentice geiko performers and to interact with them during the off-season.

“Given the educational goals of each school and the importance of inquiry and experience, the destinations of these trips should naturally become more diverse and decentralized,” said the chairman of the Japan School Tours Bureau. “I hope that students will also do some pre- and post-trip study to make their educatory journey more fulfilling.”

Meg: Hi Jill. Welcome back. How was your trip with Jim?

Jill: Fantastic. We had a wonderful time. It was so nice to get away from it all.

Meg:

Jill: It was really nice. It was so much nicer than I even thought it would be. The scenery was absolutely stunning and there were some great country villages.

Meg:

Jill: We went all over. We went over to the islands on the west. We played on some wonderful golf courses and saw some wild animals and birds.

Meg:

Jill: Oh yes. Surprisingly, that was one of the most enjoyable aspects of the trip. Some of the golf courses were in incredible locations. I usually went with him and while he was playing, I went for a walk around the course.

Meg: It sounds like a perfect holiday.

Jill: That's the thing. It's so beautiful but there was a lot of rain and there were so many insects. They were everywhere in the evening. We nearly went crazy.

Meg:

Jill: That's hard to say. There were so many great memories, but if I were to choose one, it was the beautiful sunset we experienced one evening.

A new museum of laughter in Croatia is offering to help people deal with the negativity of modern life.

Visitors to the HaHaHouse in the Croatian capital Zagreb walk into a little cloud of white smoke when they step inside. Its purpose is to blow away their worries before they climb into a “giant washing machine.”

Then they move down a twisting slide into a space with little white balls where their trip to a happier place starts.

Forty-three-year-old Andrea Golubic is the museum’s creator. Golubic said she got the idea during the COVID-19 pandemic. At that time, many people were feeling down, depressed and alone: “I realized that I had ¹⁾ a mission — to heal people with laughter.”

The idea “came straight from the heart,” Golubic told AFP, a French news agency. She had ideas for many of the museum elements in one day: “that’s how the HaHaHouse began.”

“All those who still feel a bit of childish joy and embrace their inner child, will recharge ,” she said.

*Retiree Bruno Dadic told AFP he was pleased by his visit “as there is never enough humor in life.”

“Laughter is a for the soul,” he said.

Aleksandar Suka celebrated his fifth birthday with a visit. Visiting with his mother, the little boy said he liked lying on the “Bed of Nails” since they tickled him.

Singer Zorica Bucic, from the coastal town of Split, said the museum was just right for our times.

“Entering here is like , being relieved of all problems,” she said. Bucic added that if you could come to the museum often, you would not need to visit a psychologist.

Psychologist Petar Kraljevic told AFP that laughter is a kind of weapon which gives people strength to face their problems. He said that if doctors could advise their patients to have “three hours of laughter” a day, people would feel better.
